

2.3.12

Breaking a New Role of Police Institution Toward Forensic Supports for a National Taskforce Tackling Online Sexual Exploitation

Usanut Sangtongdee

Abstract

Starting from the establishment until now, Royal Police Cadet Academy (RPCA) has been a notable institution nationwide to give academic and practical experience in the term of modern police professional. As a prototype of a new educational organization, it remains a role to guide young police both male and female to be public protectors and servants. Although the rise of disruptive technologies has totally changed crime patterns turned to cyberspace, the RPCA, a social pillar to sustain public safety, must pursue the path to fix these complicated social issues. Trafficking in persons and child sexual exploitation are increasing the negative impact on Thailand. TICAC has been stepping up in the front line to fight this war by gathering collaborations including NGOs and educational agencies. RPCA also has been selected to support the national agency by laboratory preparation and intensive training programs. Moreover, an adoption of AI technology to develop and implement a particular system regarding human face recognition into the real cases expecting to improve police works in order to verification known victims within unknown datasets.

Keywords: forensic based learning, digital evidence and crimescene, child sexual exploitation, internet crimes against children, technology driven academy